Collaboratory Call

May 14-16, 2021

Theme. Racial Geographies of Health and Wellness.

This 3-day interdisciplinary collective laboratory (collaboratory) endeavors to bring together scholars, creatives, organizers, and activists working to highlight the importance of the incorporation of social justice into the medical sciences. The collaboratory serves as a space for conversation, exchange of ideas, workshopping ideas, designated writing time, community and collaboration building, as well as community care, networking, and capacity building.

We hope to draw works that are putting BFHSS, geographies, and space in conversation together. We are looking for works exploring how the practices and modes of knowledge production of varying branches of the sciences (health, science, and medicine) continue to shape global, national, local, natural, cultural, and racial landscapes and vice versa. We ask that submissions, particularly workshop submissions, be related to the theme.

Submission topics might include but are not limited to:

- Spacialized racial difference and health precarity
- Processes of racialization within healthcare systems
- Institutions and practices of Black healing, aid, and care
- Afrofuturism, Africanfuturism, and/or Africanjujuism
- Gentrification, displacement, and health
- Digital media landscapes, health advocacy/promotion
- Spaces of healing, self-care/therapy/liberatory practices
- Urban food landscapes
- Black feminist ecologies and health
- Intergenerational health traditions and knowledge practices
- Affective, sensory, and emotional landscapes of caregiving
- Race, technology, and algorithms in healthcare
- Reproductive justice, doulas, and birthwork
- Racial capitalism, and impacts on health
- Fiction, creativity, worldmaking
- Environmental racism, Black indigeneity, and health
- Abolition, reparations, and health
